Dear Sir/ Madam,

I am writing to inform you of a terrible, frightening incident which occurred last week on Saturday morning. I realise that you are an incredibly important member of our community and busy solving a number of crimes. However, I must insist that you arrest this brazen little crook, of whom I am sure you have heard: Goldilocks.

My first and main reason that this revolting child should be arrested is that she broke into our beloved house. The door has been smashed clean off its hinges! Despite her insisting that the door was left open, I can assure you that we are an extremely careful and conscientious family. We always lock our door (you never know when the Big Bad Wolf will try and blow your house down!). Who will it be next? Will she break into Cinderella's basement? Will it be Sleeping beauty's castle that she raids? I am sure you understand that this crook must be stopped.

In addition to this, she also broke my wife's precious, antique chair. Our house is full of lovely things and special valued treasure. We have spent years collecting these expensive items and in one instant they have been ruined! My beautiful wife likes nothing more than sitting on this chair, reading peacefully. Now she has nothing to sit on! Most kind and considerate people would stop there, feeling guilty that they had broken someone else's furniture. Not this revolting little clown though – she probably laughed her head off!

Furthermore, not content at the mischief and mayhem she had caused, this little beast marched upstairs. Most children have clean, polished shoes; some, like Goldilocks, don't. It is clear that her disgusting shoes were covered in muck and grime. My wife nearly fainted when she saw how much dirt was covered all over the beds. The stench was unbearable! She had obviously clambered and climbed over the beds like a huge elephant and it is here that we found her: noisily sleeping in Baby Bear's bed. Rather than staying to apologise and clean up, she screamed (like a wicked, old hag) and ran off. Is this the behaviour of a rational person?

In conclusion, it is clear that this wicked, careless and spoilt girl must be stopped. She is a vandal. She is a thief. And worse of all, she is a brazen criminal. Maybe if she had listened at school and maybe if she had good parents and maybe if she had at least one shred of decency, none of this would have happened. However, it has. What will you do about it? She cannot be allowed to continue in this vein. I hope you will deal with this crime as quickly and efficiently as possible, before greedy Goldilocks strikes again. News of her crimes is already beginning to spread like fire. I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Yours faithfully, D.Bear
