

I can discuss what I've just read

Twice the text says that Raskolnikov continues "to tempt fate".

before. The men in the apartment are annoyed by this ringing and angrily demand to know what this rude young man wants. Raskolnikov stubbornly continues to tempt his fate and asks: "Isn't this the apartment where the moneylender and her sister were murdered three days ago? I came to see if there are still signs of blood because I am interested in renting the flat."

But Raskolnikov, instead of running away, continues to tempt fate, and says, "By all means, please call the police," and he even identifies himself by name and address. But the porter, who thinks he is just a crazy young man who wants to start a fight, prefers not to get mixed up with Raskolnikov and orders him to leave.
